BLENDED SCOTCH

Scotch whisky is a distinctive product of Scotland, made in compliance with the laws of Great Britain.
Formerly called vatted malt to describe the blending process, they are created from the blend of different casks of single malt whisky produced from different distilleries.

GIN

Gin is distilled from grain and receives its unique flavor and aroma from juniper berries and other botanicals. Every gin producer has his own special recipe, under strict quality control. The flavor of gin will vary with the distiller. Gin was first produced in Holland by Dr. Sylvius, a Dutch physician, during the 17th century. He named it Genievre, the French word for the juniper berry. It was the English who shortened the name to gin. Brought from Holland into England by English soldiers, who called it "Dutch Courage", gin soon became the national drink of England and has so remained.

TEQUILA

Tequila is obtained from the distillation of the fermented juice of the mescal plant, called pulque, which is a species of the agave plant. The long leaves of this cactus are cut off at harvest time, leaving only the bulbous central core, called the pina, meaning pineapple. The pinas are cooked, cooled and shredded, and the juice is pressed out. The fermentation process is completed in huge wooden vats. The fermented juice is then twice distilled in traditional copper-pot stills. Tequila has its own special flavor that is almost tart and leaves the tongue clean and tingling.

RUM

The Caribbean islands produce each a distinctive type of rum, the result of the base material used, the method of distillation, and the length of maturation. Generally, Spanish speaking islands, such as Puerto Rico, produce light, dry-tasting rum. The English speaking islands produce dark, heavy-tasting rum.
